More from the "Seeds of David": Impossible defeater

I love real challenging situations, because I live to give God the glory. To Him be the glory always. The tougher the challenge, the better He can get the credit when a victory is won. It's always a fight, but God always wins.

So you, if you love to praise and glorify His Name, will be rather pleased when a nearly-can't-be-done sits across your road way. You'll practically start praising. And in fact it will be good that you do, for that the fastest way to bring a wonderful triumph. The more victories there are, the more glory Jesus gets. And we all want that, as with each victory and each reason to praise, down crumbles the fortress of the departed one and his clan.

We practically can thank that scumbag for helping Jesus to look so good in comparison by giving us all one more opportunity to see Jesus win, and use us humble ones, us weak ones, us nothing-without-Jesus ones, to do the huge job.

Nothing looks totally easy to us either; if it did, we'd all be God. But we are to be vessels for His power to come through. Minds that He can think through. Souls that He can do mighty works through. Sounds like you all there too.

We just need Jesus, that's all, and then nothing at all is impossible.
