

17-Oct-2020_in the mood for loving

(Jesus speaking:) I get so excited being alone with you, when you are in the mood for loving. It's like giving Myself a really cool gift, to give you plenty to do, and then to see you not even look in that direction, when you know I am wishing to spend time with you.

Am I worth more than a clean and tidy house? Am I more important to you than the great news you are trying to pass on to friends and associates and need time to do so? Am I worth more than finally getting to stop and even pray, requesting all those important things you so desire?

Wow, it's just us. It feels more like it's us alone when you had to break away, and turn away from so much else. If we were just on a desert island with nothing to do and no one to do it with, you'd sure need Me, and I'd be very happy to be one with you then too. But with something begging for your attention everywhere you turn, and with a longer to do list than you'll ever fully get done in this lifetime, and yet you just say, "No thank you. I've got more important things." And that "more important thing" is Me--that says a lot.

It's not even because you were crushed and broken. If you leave all else because you can't stand the sight of it, and are so deeply in need of Me, even that doesn't ring out as loudly to Me as when things are going well, and you just want to make some headway, something you can see visual success with, yet you turn to spend time with Me instead.

I whisper, My soft lips breathing it out close to yours, "Thank you."