(Spirit helper speaking:) The breach in the wall has come due to your indifference to the Words of the King; you can take it or leave it, but it's not your lifeline. When have you sought Him last to speak to you personally and really cherished it like you would something you absolutely must have? He doesn't want to be a side line "can have if you like it" type of God, who you add to your life as some kind of ingredient or flavour, but he wants to be the heart beat of your life, the reason you live and what makes you breathe and get up in the morning.

There will be other methods used to continue to bring this principle home.

Let His Word be what wakes you up every morning, and the last thing you think about as you drift off to sleep, by reviewing and committing small portions of it to memory. When you take in bite sized pieces of scripture—both new and older, that is truly "feeding on the Word of God".

Every week there can be something new that you are focusing on and learning about, and part of that learning can be to both hear from the Lord in prophecy on that topic, as well as committing to memory something already written down about it.

Can you do this please? It will make a world of difference both to you and to those who are trying to assist you and help you make it through life, from the unseen part of the battle. It is like equipping them with weapons to protect you with, for every bit of God's Word that you have running through your head is something they can use to direct you in safe paths of life. The more you know of God's Word, the better off you'll be.

(Jesus speaking:) Don't give the enemy any place by leaving too many rooms open—that is to say hours or moments open where My Words aren't controlling the mood and directing the mental activity. Keep your guard up and you'll be more at peace in the thoughts department.

The first course of study can be on each of the new weapons that you know of. Memorize key passages on each one, including a verse, a new weapon explanation quotation, and so forth. They needn't be long, but concise. It will bring you victory to have these weapons at your disposal.
