

8-Jan-2021_willing and radical to win

(Jesus speaking: ) I can't say what I am going to have you do or not do, in list form. But that's part of the requirements for being on My special force, elite team. You don't get to know what is up ahead. You aren't told what to expect, just to expect to be surprised and be ready to be on call and do whatever is needed. So will you go back to ___? It's all about what gets the job done. Will you have to give up your freedom?

What freedom? Be bound to Me, and earnestly wanting My will and not your own. It's not about being willing to do this or that, but simply being in a state of "willing". That is the state you are to be in. Keep flexible and needing Me to get you through. If I say one thing is going to happen, and then something totally different happens, something you aren't to know now as it's not the time, then you might think I'm not keeping My Word.

It's not a time for stability—knowing just what is ahead and getting it all tucked into your brain, and expecting nothing else. It's a time of fluid movement. You are in the time of being very flexible, for that is only how you will win.

You'll get bent out of shape if you have a shape to call your own. "But I thought you said to do this and not that, Lord?" See that is for the time of learning "right and wrong". But we are past that gate. Now is all out war, cream the enemy or be creamed. There is no written in stone rules and plans. It all has to be secret. In fact—and this might offend you, or some—but what if I said one thing, but had to keep My real plans secret, and in fact I knew the opposite would happen, and I intended it to be so? Like when I said I would not go up to the feast in Jerusalem yet. And then I snuck there.

So there might be times, when you are asking for black and white guidelines of "what to do from now on" and My opinion on it, when the reality plays out very different. I answer your "what is righteous" query, and it's good and true what I say, but I might just pull a fast one and orchestrate things to be in a total opposite direction, just to trick the enemy if I see he's on your "righteous trail".

Does that help clarify things—why I said one thing, but you see the opposite happening, and you see it bearing good fruit? See, you didn't ask Me: "What new and fast tricky moves are You going to do in the future with us?" But "what was right and wrong" type of black and white, general advice.

But it's no longer time for rules. I rule. I say when, I say what, and I say how. I can't be bound. Neither can or should you, if you want to win. As long as you are hooked up online with Me this moment, then we'll make the best moves. Yes they might be different than what I told you yesteryear, but it's because the war is moving swiftly, and so new, even seemingly "bad" or "naughty" things might have to be done. The enemy does them all the time, and I can beat him to his game any time. Infact, I rather like to catch him unaware.

I love that look of "What?" when he lures people into his trap, only to find that it snapped backwards and caught him instead; and he was tricked into believing it was a clever idea, but only brought about souls being won. I like to use a few of the giant's spears and swords back on themselves, like the mighty men of old did, fighting them with their own weapons. (1CH.11:23)

It's totally fair when you are outside of the game and have made, and are making the rules as you go along. I'm the Creator and can do that, you know. Well, I'm not really just picking rules of the game out of thin air, it is all planned, but to some of the players, the ways I can swerve and go this way and then go so totally the other way to get more points, can seem like there isn't much structure to it all. But there really is. You just can't see it from your vantage point.

Okay, so do what I say, and move when I say to. Just because I told you one thing today, doesn't mean you are to do it forever for the rest of your life. You are willing to, yes, but being willing to do the expected isn't really the full-out, all out type of "willing" that I need. Okay? Be willing to do the unexpected that I pull out of a hat at any time, to do what? "To win some".

You can get so used to the "new you" the radical "I've forsaken all—and this is now what I am", that you forget you are to be ready at any time to change. There is no "you" as in a stable, fixed concept that someone can put their finger on—and that is the point. I don't want you under any finger or foot, or on the chopping block either.

Get going. Get doing. What? Whatever is for this day, this hour, and then move on. The new "you" is as air, as breath, as wind, that moves and goes and no man can capture it, but I. I have the storehouses for the wind, and I know who you are and where you are and how to move you and when to stay you.

Can the wind control itself or is it moved on by other powers?

Can a man capture the wind and store it away? No. It is free. And so must you be.
